THE FUTURE OF MOBILITY

Metro Atlanta is taking active steps to plan for the rapid advancements in transportation technology, such as autonomous vehicles and growing digital connectivity, which promise to transform our region.

The Atlanta Regional Commission is bringing city and county government leaders and transportation officials from across the region together for a one-day summit on the future of mobility. We're calling it ConnectATL.

The summit will provide a framework for how community leaders, civic leaders and business leaders can work together to create a stronger, better connected, and more prosperous Atlanta region. This event will serve as a signal to the world that metro Atlanta is a leader in planning for the future of mobility and smart cities and regions.

World-class Infrastructure

The 20-county Atlanta region is expected to add 2.5 million people between 2015 and 2040. Careful planning and robust investment is needed to ensure metro Atlanta has the infrastructure needed for a successful future.

Competitive Economy

To ensure that metro Atlanta's economy remains thriving and competitive into the future, the region must take steps to become a globally recognized hub of innovation and prosperity.

Healthy Livable Communities

The Atlanta region is a collection of vibrant neighborhoods, historic communities and urban places that people and businesses call home. Making these communities even better places to live, work and play is critical to the ongoing vitality of the Atlanta region.

“The advent of autonomous cars is one of the most exciting developments ever to happen to cities—and if mayors collaborate with one another, and with partners in the private sector, they can improve people’s lives in ways we can only imagine today.”
